

North Korea in 2012: Outlook for Food Security

Featuring

Panel 1:

Andrew Natsios, Former Administrator, USAID; Professor, Georgetown University

Victor Cha, Korea Chair, CSIS

Moderated by:

Johanna Nesseth Tuttle, Director, Global Food Security Project, CSIS

Panel 2:

Allan Jury, Director, U.S. Relations, United Nations World Food Program

Jeremy Konyndyk, Director, Policy and Advocacy, Mercy Corps

Moderated by:

Bill Garvelink, Senior Adviser, Project on U.S. Leadership in Development, CSIS

Thursday, February 9, 2012

2:30pm-4:30pm

B1 Conference Center

CSIS 1800 K St. NW, Washington, DC 20006

North Korea's sudden regime change has created a great deal of uncertainty for the country's political, social, and economic prospects. Given the increasing severity of the food crisis due to severe flooding, there is a need for focused attention from the international community to coordinate an effective humanitarian response. CSIS will hold a two-part panel discussion to evaluate the future of North Korean food security. Our first panel will examine the political environment, followed by an in-depth discussion of the global humanitarian response. We hope you can join us for this timely event.

Refreshments will be served.

Please RSVP to aapplefield@csis.org.